

A clean, just and competitive European Industry

Policy Conference 2025

Wednesday, 24 September 2025, 08:45 – 17:30

Jacques Delors Building, Rue Belliard 99, 1040 Bruxelles

Background

In a context of new industrial policies being developed by the European Commission, a shift in focus from the European Green Deal to competitiveness, and growing international geoeconomic tensions, it is essential to engage in constructive and multi-stakeholder discussions on industrial policy. Since the release of the Draghi report a year ago, competitiveness has become the main theme of the European Commission. However, the definition of competitiveness remains fuzzy and the narrative around it problematic. In the name of competitiveness, different initiatives are advanced that entail deregulation and backtracking on green commitments. In other cases, we see calls for channelling subsidies to large incumbent companies, also in the name of competitiveness. In terms of decarbonisation and just transition, the foundation provided by the Clean Industrial Deal now has to be turned into reality, with the many challenges that come with designing and implementing complex policies.

The conference will discuss the goals of European industrial policies and explore the necessary combination of the clean, just and competitive dimensions. What is competitiveness and its role in achieving European policy objectives? How can industrial policies be shaped in a way that supports a just transition, including accelerated decarbonisation, workers' rights and an enhanced quality of life and environment for all? What should be the EU's goals and vision for trade, coherent with its industrial policy and just transition?

To explore these questions, the policy conference will bring together a wide array of speakers, from high-level political figures to trade union representatives, civil society experts and academic researchers. The conference will propose evidence-based analyses on the state and needs of the EU's industrial policies, debates between high-level political, civil society and industry representatives, and stimulating discussions on different topics such as decarbonisation, competitiveness, labour markets, trade and circularity. The programme will include different formats: keynote speeches, high-level panel discussions, presentations and smaller interactive sessions.

The conference is organised by FEPS and Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung (FES), in collaboration with the S&D Group in the European Parliament, PES Group in the European Committee of the Regions, the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC), IndustriAll Europe and SOLIDAR.

Going beyond a neoliberal trade paradigm

In the world of trade disruptions, the main navigation principle for the EU is to clearly define its goals for trade and to stick to this vision. What goals do we want to achieve through trade? How can trade can help achieve industrial policy goals? What does it mean for trade deals and cooperation with partners? Is the policy focus on competitiveness a driver or a brake to international partnerships?
